

Rely only on the best...

Company law is a minefield. That's why you should rely on the most comprehensive company law publication on the market. Your clients depend on it.

The CCH Australian Corporations & Securities Law Reporter

Accurate, reliable and always current.

Subscribers know they can trust the information in the Reporter as it's brought up to date every three weeks through loose-leaf reports.

With this three volume Reporter on hand, you'll be constantly in touch with how the law affects day-to-day procedures. This practical emphasis comes from the CCH Corporations Law Editors in association with an expert team of consultants which includes Professor Robert Baxt as general consultant editor, Blake Dawson Waldron, Clayton Utz, Corrs Chambers Westgarth and Dr W. John Kenley.

For more details about the Reporter please complete the form below. Receive a further information pack or see how the Reporter works in practice by arranging for a free, no-obligation inspection.

Also available

For precise information on how the Corporations Law is being enforced, CCH also publishes the loose-leaf Australian Securities Commission Releases as well as a comprehensive range of Corporations Law Books. For further information please tick the relevant box.

and neglected by Canberra.

Indeed, our learned Solicitor-General, Tom Pauling QC, who was then a private practitioner, spoke at what was supposed to be a friendly dinner for Senator Greenwood.

He succinctly said: "I quote from a sign now at the 16-mile and which says: This is not a rubbish dump. Bugger off."

Fortunately, the Northern Territory now has a comprehensive legal aid system, a structured law reform process and its own authorised reports.

It is also fortunate that the Society has not had to deal with an issue as emotional as capital punishment in its recent history.

For a Councillor's recollection of how it was, see our interview with Geoff James on pages 6-8 of this issue.
