

New super laws now in operation

The introduction of the Superannuation Industry Supervision (SIS) Scheme has caused great uncertainty in the superannuation industry. The pressure is now on legal advisers to give current, accurate advice on the new rules and obligations.

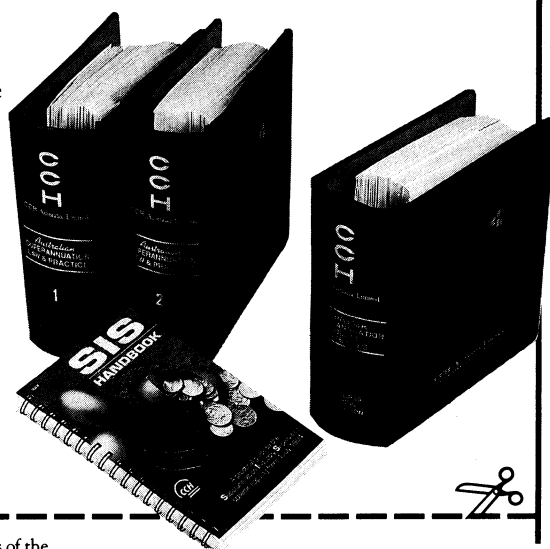

To help you advise with total confidence, CCH has released the SIS Handbook. The Handbook explains the legislation and helps you understand how the Scheme works. It incorporates all the deadlines, rules and procedures, plus the regulations gazetted on 11 March.

CCH also provides two superannuation loose-leaf services for a comprehensive treatment of all aspects of superannuation and on-going coverage of developments in this volatile area.

Australian Superannuation Law & Practice covers planning, installing, administering and reviewing a fund. You're kept up to date through approximately 10 reports a year.

Australian Superannuation Source Materials collates all the source materials you require in one convenient, easy-to-use volume. Updates are issued when new source materials are released.

To order your copy of the SIS Handbook or to find out more about these two superannuation services, please see the coupon below. ☒

Aboriginal centre: help sought

The National Aboriginal Youth Law Centre is seeking Law Society members to contribute to the centre's activities.

Director Margeret Friel said a register of volunteers and legal expertise would be important support mechanisms for the centre's operation.

Funded by the Australian Youth Foundation and the NT University, the centre opened in April this year.

It is a project of the Aboriginal Legal Services of the NT, NT University and the Law School of Flinders University, South Australia.

"The centre has been established to promote the legal rights of Aboriginal children and young people," Margeret said.

'Our activities will be directed at using and improving the law'

"Our activities will be directed at using and improving the law, legal systems and legal services for the advancement of the rights of young Aboriginal people."

Specific activities of the centre include:

- * monitoring the implementation of recommendations of the Royal Commission on Aboriginal Deaths in Custody;
- * monitoring the implementation of principles of the International Convention on the Rights of the Child;
- * the provision of legal education to Aboriginal youth;
- * the provision of an information service and undertaking original research and;
- * the provision of assistance with litigation and/or litigation.

"We are inviting members who are able to contribute to drop us a line or give us a call," Margeret said.

Call Margeret Friel on 46 6938 if you would like to get involved.
