

Law Week 1997
25 - 31 May
Access To Justice

Let 'em Have It ...

Law Week is about public education. The community wants information about how the law works, how it affects them, who's involved, how to access knowledge and help. Here's a chance to give it to them and at the same time dispel some of the misconceptions about the profession and the people who work in it.

Law Week is the most important public legal education event on the calendar.

And ...

if you've got any bright ideas for other activities, let us have them. You'd be surprised what can be organised at short notice with a bit of support (or salted away for an even better Law Week in 1998).

We Know You're Busy, But ...

You can be a part of Law Week without throwing your schedule out of the window. Here's how:

- Come to the Breakfast Launch on Monday morning - bring a few colleagues with you
- Sponsor the Breakfast (or at least some of it) - let the public know that you're interested in their business
- Get up a team for the Tug of War from your workplace
- Take out some advertising space in the planned Feature Page in the NT News
- Volunteer some time to give a short radio interview on your involvement in the law
- Make sure your firm or office has some information included in the public library displays
- Attend the hypothetical at the NTU on Monday night
- Oh, and don't forget to book AND PAY well in advance to ensure your place at the Law Week lunch - as a reward for your support of your profession.

Full details of all activities will be broadcast to all offices early in May. Or you can contact the Law Society on tel: 8981 5104 for further information.
