

The Practitioner

Weekly update from the Law Society Northern Territory

Suzie Simmons,
Public Relations Officer,
Law Society Northern Territory

It has recently come to the Society's attention that a number of practitioners have stopped receiving their regular copy of The Practitioner, the Society's weekly e-newsletter. In some instances, over a period of several months.

The Practitioner is emailed individually to recipients from the back end of the Law Society's website, and the mailing logs provided by this facility have indicated that all mailings have been successfully sent. Hence, the Society was unaware that there was an issue until we finally received one or two complaints.

In-depth investigations by our website providers have resulted in some enhancements to the configuration settings, which, following testing, it is believed has rectified the problem. It is suspected that the problem was resultant of changes to the recipients' spam filters.

The Practitioner is the fastest way for the Society to disseminate information to its members without spamming them with multiple emails, so if anyone is still not receiving their copy, please contact me via email on publicrelations@lawsocnt.asn.au.

Please remember that if you are not receiving The Practitioner, the Society will remain unaware until you advise us otherwise.

Website Login Security!

Members are reminded to protect their LSNT website login details from misuse by third parties. The Society is aware that a number of practitioners have supplied their login details to their staff. Members should be aware that future enhancements to the Members Only section of the website may include confidential information that they may not wish their staff to have access to.

Law Society Members' Christmas Drinks
