Chief Justice's observations

On behalf of all the Judges of the Supreme Court, I congratulate you, ladies and gentlemen, and welcome you to the ranks of the legal profession.

Your personal achievement is substantial. Justice Williams, Justice Mackenzie and I were admitted as barristers many years ago, but the demanding course of meticulous study prerequisite to admission as a legal practitioner never departs one's recollection; and in addition, you have completed the required practical training, which we hope you found both interesting and helpful. Your present achievement is however but the herald for a lifetime of professional development. The most effective lawyers – those who best serve their clients – are those who continue, throughout their professional lives, to broaden their professional knowledge, to hone their professional expertise.

Today you join a noble profession with a substantial commitment to public service including, with increasing reach, the provision of services pro bono to those of limited financial means.

The ethical standards which characterize the profession in Queensland are high, and I say that while nevertheless acknowledging the blight on the profession, wrought by a few only, brought out into the open in recent times. You may be sure the court is vigilant to ensure the profession continues to acknowledge and fulfil its high ethical obligation, and the discharge of its duty to clients with competence and expertise.

As you would probably already appreciate only too well, you join a competitive profession. There are currently in Queensland 751 members and 178 associate members of the Bar Association and 5,764 solicitors with practising certificates. This last year the court had admitted 92 new barristers and 583 new solicitors (apart from those admitted under Mutual Recognition legislation). That extent of infusion of talent into an already substantial profession means there can be no doubt, for success, that you must meet reasonably high expectations.

Some of you may not enter into legal practice as such. I am sure you will in that event nevertheless continue to appreciate the mental acuity and moral commitment which underpin your new qualifications.

We hope, ladies and gentlemen, that you rise to these substantial challenges. Your prospects will be enhanced if you continue to draw support from those who have, more than likely, assisted you greatly to this present pinnacle: your families and friends, so many of whom we welcome here this morning to share your sense of fulfilment.

We again wish you well in your careers.

Chief Justice's observations

On behalf of the Judges, ladies and gentlemen, I congratulate you upon your admission to the legal profession. Your admission is confirmation of substantial intellectual achievement and a good deal of persistence and application. You are to be commended for reaching this important milestone, and no doubt you will gratefully acknowledge the support of your parents, families and friends.

You join a large profession. As some indication there are currently some 751 members and 178 associate members of the Bar Association of Queensland, and the Queensland Law Society currently registers 5,764 solicitors as holding practising certificates. The Queensland profession is in fact even larger, allowing, for example, for corporate lawyers and the world of academia. With a finite amount of legal work, albeit in an economically bustling State, conditions within the profession are therefore quite competitive. Last year, we admitted as many as 92 barristers and 583 solicitors. I mention these figures not to daunt you, but to suggest that to succeed, and shine, in this new competitive milieu, you should regard your present qualifications as but a start, as the foundation for a body of legal knowledge and wisdom to be developed throughout your professional lives.

Much has been said and written in an attempt to express the essence of practice as a barrister/solicitor. We are told that the legal profession is not necessarily universally respected and valued. While that may be so, much of the criticism of the profession is captious and demonstrably unfair to its conscientious members. My own early ethical training, like that of many of my colleagues, was based on Professor Harrison's work,

“Law and Conduct of the Legal Profession in Queensland”, which includes this passage I offer by way of serious encouragement:

“Civilisation rests on social order, and social order rests on the maintenance of the law. Hence throughout the ages the law has ranked as a high calling because it serves the most fundamental needs of the community, order and justice, and because at its best it calls for the highest qualities of character and intellect.”

Your being admitted formally today by the Supreme Court reflects this Court’s role as the ultimate determinant and custodian of legal professional standards. Just as it has fallen to the Judges to authorise courses of legal study and determine admission standards, so we pass from time to time upon issues of fitness to practise. We expect much of you: integrity, legal understanding, sound judgment, practical wisdom, and not the least, moral courage –all dedicated to your efficient service of the people who will depend upon your expert capacities for the resolution of their difficulties. But in the end, while the interests of the clients are extremely important, it is of course your duty to the Court and the administration of the law which must predominate: it is that predominance which distinguishes the legal profession from others.

If you do not enter into legal practice as such, I hope you will nevertheless continue to draw inspiration from the jurisprudential training which has led you to this point: it should have induced a dimension of mental acuity and moral perception of enduring value.

As you rightly bask today in the lustre of your achievements, I know you will remember not only those you are destined to serve, but also those who have helped you to the position you now enjoy, especially as I have said, your parents, families and friends. I do hope they will remain, for you, important sources of encouragement and wise counsel.

You go forward now with our congratulations and best wishes.

Chief Justice’s observations

The admission of barristers and solicitors at the beginning of the calendar year is an encouraging signal of the continuity of the legal profession which serves the people of Queensland generally so well. We welcome you to the ranks of that profession, and wish you well as you exercise new privileges and embrace new responsibilities.

You will be challenged to develop and demonstrate considerable talent as you enter what is a substantial and competitive profession.

Today is not the occasion for a lecture on professional ethics, but I hope you will always recognize that you owe your professional legitimacy to the court, and your overriding duty borne to the court notwithstanding the interests of the client. I hope that you will also acknowledge the goal of public service which underpins your new professionalism, and be astute to the plight of the under privileged within our community: the professional associations, and many of the firms, run active and well-developed pro bono schemes which should be of interest to you.

If you choose not to pursue a practising career, you will nevertheless I am confident always value your qualification: it signifies substantial personal achievement, and bespeaks mental acuity and ethical commitment.

I know you would wish us to acknowledge the contribution made to your present achievement by your families and friends. We welcome them to the Banco Court today. They must remain sources of encouragement, inspiration and wise advice as you move forward.

On behalf of all of the Judges, I again congratulate you and wish you well as you exercise these qualifications.
