Chief Justice’s observations

Queensland is one of a small number of Australian jurisdictions in which citizens, natural and corporate, still enjoy the benefit of an independent bar. We certainly hope that situation persists.

All lawyers should present as specialist professionals. Members of the bar protest a particular specialization. It is one which allies them closely with the courts in the discharge of the charter of the delivery of justice according to law.

The barrister’s specialty, in relation to the courts, is dual: first, expert advocacy, both oral, and increasingly these days, in writing; and second, through informed advice to clients, effectively regulating the flow of work to the courts, and hopefully ensuring the courts are occupied only with cases which necessitate adjudication usefully informed by the adversarial process.

In that context, the barrister occupies a position especially close to this court, the court from which he or she derives professional lineage. As part of that, to meet the reasonable expectations of our constituency, we must all operate optimally, while independently.

The rank of barristers is burdened by substantial additional public significance, although it is a burden which is, one gauges, willingly and effectively borne. While, as I have said, barristers owe their professional lineage to the Supreme Court, and while the work accomplished by barristers is indispensable to the courts in the discharge of their mission, the bar is ultimately characterized by a steely independence. independence of the bar amounts to nothing less than one of the important safeguards of our democracy.

On behalf of all the Judges, we welcome you, ladies and gentlemen, to the ranks of the Queensland and thence the Australian bar.

We urge you to seek to discharge the high public duties of your role, as barristers, with fierce independence and high competence, while exhibiting undoubted integrity; and importantly in addition, we encourage you to develop a marked degree of expert specialty.
