

definition was couched in the widest terms, and this was to ensure that public expenditure was directed to those who stand in actual need of income support. The definition was wide enough to embrace receipts of a capital nature as well as income. Therefore the AAT had erred in following Hungerford and accepting a narrower definition.

Formal decision

The Federal Court set aside the decision of the AAT and remitted the matter back to the AAT for reconsideration.

Overpayment: received in good faith

SECRETARY TO THE DEETYA v PRINCE
(Federal Court of Australia)

Decided: 21 November 1997 by Finn J.

The DEETYA appealed an AAT decision that the debt owed by Prince to the Commonwealth should be waived pursuant to s.289 of the Student and Youth Assistance Act 1973. This debt was incurred because Prince received AUSTUDY payments to which he was not entitled.

The law

Section 289 of the Student and Youth Assistance Act provides that the DEETYA must waive a debt to the Commonwealth if there was administrative error, and 'the person received in good faith the payment or payments that gave rise to the debt'.

Background

Prince received AUSTUDY payments in 1993. He took steps to cancel those payments on 22 December 1993 because he realised he would not be qualified to receive payments in 1994. The DEETYA continued to pay Prince to March 1994 in error. In May 1994 the DEETYA advised Prince that there was a debt which he must repay. Between December 1993 and February 1994 Prince was not aware that he was receiving the AUSTUDY payments. At some stage in February he became aware of the payments, and took steps to have them cancelled.

The AAT's decision

The AAT waived the debt because it found that there had been administrative error, and Prince had received the payments in good faith. The AAT interpreted 'received' as having occurred when the payments were made into Prince's account. The Tribunal found that the payments received up until February 1994 were received in good faith because Prince had been unaware that he was continuing to receive AUSTUDY payments. After Prince became aware that the payments were continuing, the AAT decided that, the fact that Prince had appropriated the moneys was only one of the factors to be taken into account to decide whether or not the money had been received in good faith. Other factors included his attempts to advise the DEETYA so that they would stop paying the money.

'Received in good faith'

Finn J found a clear and culpable error of law in the AAT's decision.

The AAT:

'correctly concluded that payments were "received" when they were available for Mr Prince's use and that occurred when they were deposited in his bank account. It likewise correctly noted that the formula "good faith" derives its meaning from its particular context.'

(Reasons, p.4)

In the Court's opinion the question of whether or not the payments were received in good faith was not answered by considering whether Prince acted in good faith towards the DEETYA. 'Its sole concern is with whether a particular state of affairs existed at the time a payment (or payments) is received': Reasons, p.4.

Finn J found that 'received in good faith' was concerned with a person's state of mind when they received the payments. If the person had reason to know that he or she was not entitled to the payment, then the person did not receive the payment in good faith. The person must believe that she or he is entitled to receive the payments.

Prince knew that he was not entitled to receive the AUSTUDY payments, and therefore it could not be said that he had received them in good faith. This was so even though for part of the period he was not aware that payments were being made. Prince was never able to assert that any payments that were made to him by mistake, were ones to which he believed he was entitled.

Formal decision

The Federal Court set aside the decision of the AAT and substituted its decision that the original decision to raise and recover the debt is to be affirmed.

Overpayment: special circumstances and financial hardship

SECRETARY TO THE DSS v HALES
(Federal Court of Australia)

Decided: 16 March 1998 by French J.

Hales has been receiving the disability support pension (DSP) since 29 August 1991 for chronic fatigue syndrome. Her partner Reddy, commenced employment on 5 March 1994 receiving gross wages of $385.00 a week. Hales commenced working on 26 October 1995 receiving a gross weekly wage of $418.70. On 27 October 1995 Hales told the DSS that she and Reddy had commenced employment. She continued to receive the pension until 21 March 1996 when it was cancelled following a review of her medical condition.

Hales was overpaid DSP of $8740.90 and the DSS sought recovery of that amount. On review the SSAT agreed that Hales had been overpaid $8740.90, and that this was a debt to the Commonwealth. The SSAT decided that so much of the debt that had occurred after 27 October 1995 was attributable to departmental error and thus should be waived. Hales requested review by the AAT who decided that the total amount should be waived.

Notices

Hales received a letter from the DSS on 16 January 1993 telling her that she must inform the DSS within 14 days if her combined income exceeded $76.00 a week. She received a further letter dated 24 March 1993 to that affect, and in a letter dated 22 March 1993 Hales was asked to give the DSS her partner's tax file number. Hales complied with that request.

The AAT's decision

The AAT found that Hales had been overpaid $8740.90, and it was conceded by the DSS that the amount paid after 26 October 1995, $1839.60, should be waived because of administrative error and because Hales had received the payments in good faith. This matter was not disputed by the DSS before the Federal Court.

With respect to the balance of the overpayment of $6901.30, the AAT found that Hales had failed to comply with the notices she had received and had been overpaid DSP under s.1224(1) of the Social Security Act 1991 (the Act).
