Are books revolting?

BOOKS to learn Chinese in Braille, a National Library press release was headed.

Interesting, different, I thought. But why? Had a directive been issued to books that they must learn Chinese — and in Braille, or add it been their own decision? Were some books beginning to tire of waiting on the shelf and wished to embark instead on a course of self-improvement?

Or had they become so concerned about the Technological Revolution and reports of the demise of books that they felt it was essential to acquire some extra skills? And if that was the case, was learning Chinese in Braille really the answer?

But assuming this was not actually a decision made by the books themselves, rather a directive from a higher authority, I wondered if all books were to learn Chinese, and all in Braille. Or were some books to learn other subjects in Braille, and others to learn Chinese, but not in Braille? The possibilities are endless. And that of course inevitably leads one to the question of exactly how the books are going to make use of their new-found skills...

The question seemed such an enormous one that I was surprised that the press release was able to cover it in a single page. So I read on, by then extremely eager to find the answer to this problem.

And then I found that the books weren't going to learn anything, after all. The story was in fact about two people who wanted to read Chinese books in Braille.

Michael Carroll and Anita Tse are both blind; Michael is learning Chinese and needed text books, Anita comes from Hong Kong and wanted to read some books in her native language.

They initially approached the Braille & Talking Book Library, who, unable to help, referred the request to the National Library, where Cliff Law, in charge of library services for the handicapped, made contact with libraries in the US, China, Taiwan and Hong Kong.

Eventually twelve suitable books were located in Hong Kong, but the cost of air freighting them was prohibitive, and they would have taken months by sea. It seemed as if there was still a problem, but then Qantas came to the rescue, and have flown the books in free of charge.

So the story has a happy ending — though I can't help feeling a bit sad that I can't be the first to tell InCite readers about the revolution in the book world!

THE UNIVERSITY OF NEW SOUTH WALES BROKEN HILL DIVISION THE LIBRARY

Annual Report for 1982

The Library's 'Book Vote' for 1982 was $24,000; expenditure and commitment for the year was $25,475. Council's decision to close the W.S. & L.B. Robinson College in 1984<sup>1</sup> prompted the cancellation of subscriptions to a number of serial titles, and fewer books were ordered than in previous years. However, the number of Inter-Library Loan requests sent and received remained high. In fact the number of requests received in 1982 was considerably greater than in 1981, perhaps indicating that some other libraries had also cancelled a large number of their serial titles.

It is anticipated that, when the College closes, the Fowler's Gap Arid Zone Research Station will operate independently, and the Fowler's Gap Library will maintain its own records. In the past Fowler's Gap has been part of the Broken Hill Division. Arrangements are being made for all books and serials ordered for Fowler's Gap to be sent direct to the Officer-in-Charge.

The Mining Managers Association Geological Research Library continues to be used by local and visiting geologists, and by post-graduate students. A decision regarding the relocation of the MMA Library's collection of theses, reports and journal articles is expected to be made some time in 1983.

Research grant for Tasmanian project

The first Sir John Morris Research Grant has been awarded to Mrs J. Rees of Hobart. She has been granted $12,106 to work on the 'Early Imprints Project Tasmania', which will involve collecting data for a union catalogue of books, periodicals, ephemera etc., printed before 1801, held in institutional and private collections in Tasmania.

While this project is intended to assist scholars working in Tasmania by indicating what is available locally, it is also an essential part of the 'Australia and New Zealand Early Imprints Project' which will be contributing to a still larger project in Britain and the United States known as the 'Eighteenth-century Short Title Catalogue' (ESTC).

After the Tasmanian data is collected, it will be converted to machine-readable form and, following final checking and editing, will be transmitted to the National Library for inclusion in the Australia and New Zealand Early Imprints Project file.
