

Disruptions in WA

From August 1984, till the end of the year, disruptions to service from the J S Battye Library of West Australian History, the State Archives and the State Reference Library may be expected due to the planned move into the Alexander Library Building. Early warning is hereby given, especially to academic institutions, so that researchers and visitors from overseas and the other Australian States who may expect to use the various collections may plan ahead. Much of the material housed in annexes, especially archives, maps and newspapers, normally on a 30-hour call, may well at different times be unavailable for up to five weeks. The move will be staged so that the move of one collection from one area is complete before the next begins.

Although a timetable has been drawn up, changes are very likely. Those wishing to make long-term plans should contact the Battye Library or the State Reference Library when they may be supplied with the latest timetable; additionally such enquirer would be well advised to re-check closer to mid-1984. When all the annexes and stack areas have been moved, the Reading Rooms and all public service points will be temporarily closed.

The precise dates of the closure will be widely advertised closer to the time of the move, but at this stage late November/early December 1984 appears the most likely time for full close-down of services.

State Librarian

Intro to PASCAL

AN INTRODUCTORY two-part course, designed to cover all the elements of the PASCAL programming language, will be broadcast over the University of New South Wales radio station, starting on 7 March. A repeat of one of Radio University's most popular computing courses, the series is also available on cassette.

PASCAL is considered today's most sophisticated structured programming language, which provides extra capabilities that boost performance and cut development time for almost all computer projects. The lecturer, Mr Ken Robinson of the University of NSW Department of Computer Science, says that the concepts discussed can be applied by the beginner as well as the experienced programmer and is suited to both business and personal computers.

Transistor radios modified to pick up the Radio University frequency in the Sydney metropolitan area are available for $12, including postage. Full particulars on this and other continuing education courses by radio and cassette can be obtained from the University of NSW on (02) 662 2691.
