anctions or censorship?

nis letter is written as a result of reading the pinions of Jeff Leeuwenburg (18 July). The entioned opinions concerning the South Afcan official policies and the government enrcing them regard themselves to one side of e argument, the side that we never stop earing about.

It is about time that we, the world, stopped riting a moral rulebook in which the counies that agree think that they have the right make unaligned countries follow their ews.

Economic and other sanctions are a form of ctatorship which will not do any good in ost situations, and it is indeed something at the Western 'democracy' vehemently oposes in its basic structural policies.

For viewers of the Carleton-Walsh report ere was an insight into the question of sancons. The primary namesake of the show read rough a list of all sanctions performed by the ritish since the first World War. In these he ould only find one that had had the desired fect, proving that they are useless.

I was under the impression that I was enterg into a profession that could abstain from volving itself in such deplorable actions, but can see that the seeds are there waiting to be wn.

I suggest that librarians continue in their esent vein, as a profession with very few ces, and not dictated to by the politics of the y. One of the most important values of the orary is to protect against bias. To stop trade ith South Africa simply because of its polies would facilitate a form of this bias.

It is not our business to decide if nations. ganisations, or even individuals are right or rong in what they do, but it is our business remain Impartial and present Both Sides of e argument, no matter what our personal ews are

Remember, libraries as I understand them, ould be free from all influences. We stock ooks about and by Buddhists, Hare Khrishis, and countless other religions and sects. mply not believing in a subject or its doings not reason enough to impose censorship on

The South African Government has done othing to libraries specifically and as such ere are no grounds for stopping loans trade ith them.

T.C. Lawton (WAIT library student)

)r Official Action?

eff Leeuwenburg's letter in InCite for 18 July ises a number of professional issues which quire further thought and comment.

I am in entire sympathy with the basic conntion that librarians should consider witholding their services from South Africa when ich services are likely to assist a repugnant id repressive regime.

The first two courses of action suggested, owever, seem unacceptable to me. In my pinion quietly mislaying a request is more cely to cause the requestor to regard the libry to which it is made as inefficient than to use it to realise that the request is being deed on political or moral grounds.

Similarly, personal representations by interorary loans officers are likely to carry little oral weight.

What is needed is official information, from e library to which the request is made, that e request for material will not be granted. It only by official action that we can hope to stitute change. The personal responsibility hich we all have is to work, as Leeuwenburg ggests, for institutional policies.

Juliet Flesch

Position wanted

I am desirous of emigrating to Australia and therefore wish to seek employment in any academic, public or special library. I have more than 20 years of library experience and considerable expertise on the URICA computerised library system. My present position is that of a Data Base Management in a university

My library qualifications are MLS from the University of Pittsburgh, MS in ED from Indiana University, Bloomington, and MA from the University of Durban-Westville.

Manikam Moodley 140 Battersea Avenue Reservoir Hills Durban 4091 South Africa

No laughing matter

I wish to protest about your comments on the advertisement, appearing in The Sun-Herald, 29 June, 1986, 'casting librarians in a quiet and timid role . . .' I find your remarks on this very distasteful advertisement to be almost as offensive as the ad itself.

Not only does the advertisement use a librarian stereotype, it also uses a sexist and exploitative view of an 'attractive' woman to promote a product which bears no relation to either of these misconceived images.

Your flippant reply only serves to reinforce the use of these two incorrect and offensive stereotypes, damning to both the library profession and women in general.

Surely this is not a responsible reply from a 'professional' association?

Pamela M Jenkins

AN EVENING WITH JAMES THOMPSON

Monday, 8 September 1986

James Thompson, Librarian of the University of Reading, is the author Power and The End of of Library Hear his views on the Libraries. future of libraries in the age of high technology, and a rapidly sinking Australian dollar.

Venue: Board Room, YWCA, Wentworth Avenue

Darlinghurst 6 for 6.30 pm.

$15, $10 for LAA mem-Cost:

bers. Refreshments will be served.

Contact: Sue Phillips, LAA

Tel. (02) 692 9233 (008) 221 1481

LITTLE ONE

Emily Sutherland

Enjoyable, sensible, caring insight into the social, emotional and practical issues involved in being young, unmarried and pregnant.

Now set as required reading in Schools and Tertiary Colleges.

Available from Landin Press. Box 591 Elizabeth. S.A. 5112. (08) 280 7077

R.R.P. $8.95

THE LAA VIDEO

Students of the School of Library and Information Management at the SA Institute of Technology recently were shown the LAA video and their reactions have been supplied.

Asked if they considered that they gained an overall picture of the LAA, 16 thought 'yes' and 6 'no'. Sixteen students thought the video was about the right length, 2 thought it was too short and 4 found it too long. Twelve students found no area in which they required further information but 10 thought otherwise. Five of the viewers were unimpressed by the range of LAA activities but 14 were impressed. Only 5 would have preferred a personal talk, while 15 favoured the video. Twelve expressed the view that the video had encouraged them to join the LAA, but 10 did not feel the urge.

Enlarging on the question about wanting more specific information about the LAA, some felt that there was insufficient explanation of what benefit LAA membership could give to student members.

Another comment was that although the video kept reinforcing that LAA membership was a must, it didn't give clear enough reasons why. A number of people found that the video still left them unclear about how the LAA benefits the individual and about what the LAA actually does. More information about the sections and special interest groups was also asked for.

It was also suggested that a combination of the video and a personal talk would have been useful, in particular to cover the points raised by the students.

Other comments included that the video should explain how the LAA helps people to get jobs, should have more emphasis on activities for students, a feeling of uneasiness at belonging to an association with a basically 'professional' membership.

Enquiries about the LAA video should be addressed to Angela Brommann at Head Office (02) 692 9233 Toll free (008) 22 1481.

BiblioFile at UQLibrary

The University of Queensland Library is using BiblioFile to assist in its retrospective conversion project. BiblioFile marketed in Australia by ALDIS (Australian Laser Disk Information Services Pty. Ltd.), provides access to over three million Library of Congress MARC records on four compact laser discs.

BiblioFile is mounted on a CD-ROM disc drive with software on an IBM PC clone. Selected records are saved to a floppy disc file, and then converted to a standard AUSMARC format by software provided by ALDIS. The AUSMARC file is then down-line loaded from the PC to the Library's DEC PDP 11 based system for proof-listing, editing and indexing.

The benefits of using BiblioFile are seen as the ability to schedule retrospective cataloguing depending on the availability of staff, its ease of use, the high success rate and relatively inexpensive price per record.

BiblioFile, with its monthly English language updates, will also be used to select AUS-MARC records for new titles.

The library estimates it could select, convert to AUSMARC and up-load over 700 records per day. Staff acceptance of BiblioFile has been high with the knowledge that they are at the leading edge of information technology in using the compact laser discs.

> Sue McKnight Deputy Technical Services Librarian U of Q Library