

Crossing the Nullarbor

It would appear that the current 'Free Library Services' statement is not the first to have problems crossing the Nullarbor (Lyn Allen, inCite 11, 1994).

While it is claimed the previous version will be retained it is obvious that it too never made the trip... Charges for 'value added' services have existed in WA long before the much publicised revision.

Just what is the problem?

A helping hand

I was very interested to read that the Victorian Parliamentary Library has a scheme to help newly-qualified librarians gain experience, and as a result, become very employable. (inCite 12, 1994).

It seems to me that the library's philosophy has been put into such practice for many years. Bruce Davidson gave me much personal encouragement several years back when he employed me as a clerical assistant and wrote a glowing reference for me to be accepted in the library school at Melbourne University.

Since I have graduated I have tried to follow his lead, and have left this medical library (Bethesda Hospital) in the charge of newly-graduated librarians whenever I am able to go overseas. As a direct result of having the experience of being a 'one-man' worker, they have, without exception, been employed immediately. Perhaps when they, in their turn, are able to help a newly-qualified colleague, they will. I hope so.

Orana subscriptions

Subscriptions to Orana, ALIA's journal of School and Children's Librarianship, are now payable direct to ALIA. If you have already returned your membership form for 1995 but not included a subscription to Orana, please drop a note and cheque to the Membership Services Manager, PO Box E441, Queen Victoria Terrace, ACT 2600. Annual subscription for four issues is normally $30 but is reduced to $25 for ALIA members and $20 for members of the CYS or School Sections.

In the February issue of Orana, Lin Linning surveys recent Australian children's historical fiction; Loris Phair describes how (and why) she cleared out her vertical file in favour of a computerised newspaper index; Celeste Blundell Camden explains how she met the information needs of homeless youth; and Roger Coleman tells how he persuaded a city council to provide Internet access to thousands of Ipswich children.

Orana's regular features — Forum, Reviews, News, and The International Scene — keep Orana readers informed of important trends in the world of Children's and school librarianship. ■
