

Crisis for children's books

Call for assistance for awards funding

The Children's Book Council of Australia has established the Awards Foundation with the aim to raise $1 million to fund the Children's Book of the Year awards. The Children's Book Council Children's Book of the Year Awards have done more for the development of children's books in Australia than anything else. The flow-on encouragement to authors, illustrators and publishers has had a profound effect on their success.

Camellias or cash

Fifty years ago, when the awards began, the prizes were a camellia if the winner was a woman, and a hearty handshake if the winner was a man. Funding from various sources over the years enabled monetary prizes to be awarded. Whether it is a reflection of the frugal nineties or an indication of stricter financial times, funding for the prizes is now unavailable. Raising $1 million will secure funding for the prizes in perpetuity and will ensure the independence of the Children's Book Council and the integrity of the awards.

No children's book of the year awards

Where would children's libraries be without the Children's Book of the Year awards? All children's librarians know about the awards. Whether or not everybody agrees with the judges' choices, the short-list and the awards provide a focus on Australian children's books. They encourage debate about children's books and increase public awareness of them through bookshops, schools and libraries.

Fund-raising in libraries

Libraries are ideal places to raise public awareness of the Awards Foundation. Countless adult readers were hooked on books by the Children's Book Council during the last fifty years. Adult readers are aware of the importance of reading as a family and encouraging their children to read, so it is appropriate that libraries provide a focus on this drive for funding. Schools are supporting the Foundation with 'Mufti Days' and other activities. Libraries can join in the fun and the fund-raising.

Donations to the CBC awards foundation are tax deductible. For donation forms, more information or materials for display contact Margaret Hamilton, phone (02) 9816 2561, fax (02) 9817 5144, or June Smith phone (02) 9630 2424, fax (02) 9630 2594. ■
