Griffith University and Blackwell Library Supply Group team up

Griffith University operates five separate campuses based in the Brisbane/Gold Coast region of Queensland. In total it currently teaches over 19 000 students. The library has a reputation for innovation and flexibility. It decided to call for registration of capacity to supply shelf-ready monographs and serials to improve productivity, after a lengthy process of examining its own strengths and weaknesses. During this analysis the library also looked 'outside' to see how some organisations managed to improve their productivity. Both the internal and external analysis convinced the library that a clearly defined partnership arrangement with a selected vendor could increase productivity by fifty per cent.

The vendor evaluation process focused on all technical service aspects relating to monographs and periodicals. After a long and thorough evaluation process of services provided by all major library supply vendors, the library chose the Blackwell Library Supply Group comprising Blackwell North America, B H Blackwell and James Bennett as its preferred supplier for serials and monographs.

The Vice Chancellor of Griffith University, Mr Roy Webb, and Julian Blackwell signed the final agreement in early December last year. Annette McNicol has been appointed 'Manager of partnerships' at the University.

Ausdoc Information Management Scholarship

Kirsty Buchan's interest in archaeology will have to take a back seat after she won the Ausdoc Information Management Scholarship for her studies in information and records management at the University of South Australia.

The scholarship, covering all fees, means that Kirsty will be able to undertake her Graduate Diploma in Information Studies (Corporate Information and Records Management) externally on a full-time basis without having to look for part-time work to support her studies. The scholarship was awarded on the basis of previous academic merit.

While an honours degree in classics and a graduate diploma in archaeology from Adelaide University might seem to bear little relation to her current course, Kirsty's interest in records management developed from an introduction to cataloguing in her archaeology studies and while working as a volunteer in the cataloguing section of the South Australian Museum.

Thomas Podeau, the manager of Ausdoc Information Management in South and Western Australia, said that Ausdoc offered the scholarship to promote the importance of information management in Australia and to increase the knowledge and standard of records managers.
