Internet now part of our library

Western Advocate (Bathurst), 5 May 1998

It might not be the yellow brick road, but finding your way onto the knowledge pathway during Australian Library Week is as easy as going to the Bathurst City Library in Keppel Street.

Celebrations at the library for ALW '98 include a number of 'spot prize' competitions, a pre-loved stock sale and Internet courses for seniors. Library membership and Internet access is free to anyone living in Bathurst and the Evans Shire while people from further away can enjoy the Bathurst services through State-wide reciprocal arrangements.

Angela Wood to visit library

Narromie News and Trangie Advocate, 1 May

The Macquarie Regional Library will be hosting a visit from Angela Wood as part of their Australian Library Week activities. Mrs Wood is the mother of Anna Wood, the fifteen-year-old girl who died of a drug overdose in 1995. Since Anna's death, the Wood family have worked tirelessly to establish the Anna Wood Drug and Al-

Libraries push ower reading

● HIS his may be the ideal moment — if a postcard distributed by the Australian Library and Information Association is anything to go by for me to borrow a book.

The card is intended, apparently, to remind us that Australian library Week kicks off today. It has certainly done

Because it features a young lady who is, I am assured, fairly typical of librarians today.

'She has certainly raised a confesses eyebrows', Trevor Wakely, from the Victorian branch of the national association.

She is meant to give the impression of dynamic power in the school, public library and kids' sector.

I knew that. But how times have changed.

Once, all librarians seemed to be dusty creatures of one sex or another who would find you something in no time flat while making you feel like a goose for not being able to find it your-

The chaps wore cardigans, the ladies twin-sets. All peered sternly at you through thickish glasses. But not any more.

The librarian of today, the card reveals is an alarmingly fit young lady with a Fitzroy haircut, the waist of Elle Macpherson and a bust that would send Pamela Anderson scampering back to the plastic surgeon.

And her upper arms would indicate that she is capable not only of reaching down heavy books from high shelves, but of effortlessly raising the Kingswood while you change a tyre.

But does she represent any librarian in particular, or is she simply an amalgam of late-nineties book-minders?

'Oh, she is simply a nameless, fictional creature', said Mr Wakely, vaguely.

I note, however, from figures released by the Australian Bureau of Statistics figures, that more people use libraries each week than attend the

Take advantage of Library Week: look, listen, communicate

Newcastle Post, 6 May 1998

Libraries are much more than rooms holding endless shelves of dusty books. In fact, they are just as likely to offer clients Internet access, CDs, videos, and CD ROM programs. The Newcastle Region Library, boasting the State's largest collection of music and videos and lending more than 2.12 million items annually, is no exception.

Local libraries will be a hive of activity in the coming week: Australian Library Week 1998 is bringing a host of events to the Newcastle public library system. Visiting author and renowned genealogist Janet Reakes will speak about using the Internet to trace your family tree, Tony Petsinas will be chatting on-line with visitors to the newly opened technology access centre, and a sale of surplus books from the various branches of the library raised money for the Hunter Mental Health Service and the Newcastle Region Library.

What do you know?

The Advocate (Brimbank), 29 April 1998

Australian Library Week begins on Sunday and Brimbank Council is celebrating by holding a knowledge quiz. Ten questions about Brimbank's library services will make up the quiz and the competition is open to everyone. Other activities during the week include free computer training seminars, toddler story times and puppet plays.

Brought to book

Courier Mail, 6 May 1998, Rosemary Sorenson

You're invited to a party to celebrate libraries: is that the kind of event you'd want to attend? Australian Library Week aims to conquer all of the stereotypical prejudices surrounding libraries and librarians and demonstrate how libraries truly are key stops on the 'Pathway to knowledge', which is this year's ALW theme.

Brisbane City Council libraries have seen their usage increase immensely this year, anticipating four million visitors in 1998. This has been spurred on by the pro-active role the libraries are taking in the latest technological revolution, which has made the creation of a 'library without walls' possible.

The Queensland Library Promotion Council president, Barbara Ewers says, 'Librarians used to be gatekeepers of information. Now they are much more likely to be interested not in their own needs but in how they can best serve their clients'.

David Hinchcliffe, chair of Brisbane City Council's community policy, says that libraries are under increasing pressure to provide a balance between the needs of traditional library customers, the information needs of new customers and the costs involved in providing everything possible to both groups.

Pathways to knowledge theme for Australian Library Week

Ballarat Courier, 2 May 1998, by Lyndal Reading

Libraries are no longer simply quiet places to house books. They now contain CD ROMs, online catalogues, audio-visual collections and Internet access.

Pathways to knowledge is the theme for Australian Library Week, to be held from tomorrow to Saturday 9 May and libraries in Ballarat will be offering tours of their facilities as well as 'Using technology' seminars. Tours will include information about resources such as special collections, recreational materials and computer technology.

Pathways theme for Library Week

Wimmera Mail Times (Horsham), 6 May 1998

Staff at Horsham branch of the Wimmera Regional Library Corporation took Australian Library Week theme, 'Pathways to knowledge', to heart during ALW '98 celebrations. Staff members wore Wizard of Oz costumes and urged visitors to walk along the 'yellow-brick road' they set up, which led to the library.

Peter Adams, the Wimmera service's senior executive officer for information technology, branch liaison and children's services and children's services, says that there are a number of non-traditional library services which the Wimmera Regional Library intended to promote during Australian Library Week. These services include free Internet access, music CD loans, talking books and large print titles.
