Can you 'outsell'?

Linda Langford

So often, as a consequence of the dynamic role we play in our profession we find ourselves chasing instead of leading. After listening to Karen Bonanno's keynote address at the School Libraries Association of Queensland 1998 conference in Townsville this year, I reflected on her ideas. This article explores the notion of 'OUTSELL'.

Karen Bonanno, past president of ASLA and director of Karen Bonanno and Associates strongly refutes the notion that teacher-librarians are fading. She believes that we have the edge on technology within our professional role. The teacher-librarian has unique opportunities in information and communication technologies; we need to harness these opportunities and go forward.

Bonanno has incorporated the business mnemonic 'OUTSELL', which is based on the work of Michael St Lawrence and Steve Johnson in their book If you're not outselling you're being outsold, in her message to us to nurture our professional edge.

What does OUTSELL stand for?

One boss: Take responsibility for yourself. Consider yourself as self-employed, starting from now. You are your own boss and your road to self-employment will involve the 7Rs: Re-organise; Restructure; Re-engineer; Re-invent yourself; Re-evaluate; Refocus; and if these 6Rs are carried out, you will Regain your professional and personal edge.

Under construction: you are constantly learning and continually challenging your capacities. Goal setting is one area in which many of us are weak. We need to desire the outcome of the goals we set, believe in them, write them down, set a deadline. Identify the obstacles that may get in our way, identify the knowledge we need to develop to work towards these goals, identify others who may be helpful in the realisation of these goals, and then develop a plan.

Tell it with gusto: Believe in what it is you desire. Develop your knowledge to strengthen your goal, and develop the courage and confidence to be able to express your goal publicly.

Signed, sealed, delivered: remember the law of indirect returns: the more you give, the more you get.

Eat breakfast with champions: Creative networking is critical to your influence.

Life's hard: hunker down but reach for the high ground.

Live, thrive and come alive in the impact zone: live by reflecting on the laws of reciprocity, control, cause and effect, belief systems, expectations, and attraction.

Change in the way you think about your life and your goals takes considerable reflective thinking and the courage to look deeply at yourself, but it also depends on accepting the 'O' in OUTSELL. ■

Paradise possessed

Major exhibition at the National Library of Australia

An exhibition of treasures from one of the world's greatest collections of material relating to the European discovery, exploration and colonisation of the South Pacific opened at the National Library Gallery on 6 August.

Paradise possessed: the Rex Nan Kivell collection features drawings and romantic landscapes, portraits and prints, manuscripts, books, rare maps and intriguing historical objects — many on public display for the first time.

The exhibition is a celebration of the centenary of Rex Nan Kivell's birth and a tribute to this collector of great foresight, imagination and persistence. Beginning in London in 1919 until his death in 1977, Sir Rex de Charambac Nan Kivell pursued his obsession to document the entire European encounter with Australasia and the South Pacific during the seventeenth, eighteenth and nineteenth centuries.

Acquired by the National Library by purchase and donation from the 1940s to the 1970s, the Nan Kivell collection is recognised internationally for its historical, artistic and intellectual significance.

The exhibition Paradise possessed, and the accompanying book, explore the diversity and richness of this world-class collection, and the extraordinary vision and tenacity of its creator. ■
