

es, there are many library professionals who show their allegiance with a dash—or more—of body art but INCITE has (this time) resisted the call of the tattoo parlour. Instead, we put the call out to the creative universe for a different take on all things library and found our world inspires creative souls in many different ways.

An information professional's fine eye for detail (along with a few spare hours and a steady hand) is behind the library-inspired artistic achievement pictured above. Sarah Kolb-Williams is a science fiction editor, consultant and "serial comma enthusiast" based in St Paul, Minnesota, with clients that include publishing companies in the United States and individual authors worldwide. Sarah shows her hand and displays her passion for the written word where everyone can see it, on her nails!

UK-based fine art photographer Nicola Taylor is known for her ethereal visual images. She pays homage to her favourite stories in her collection of talisman jewellery, including this delicate locket. She's a fan of Wuthering Heights and other classics that showcase her native North Yorkshire landscapes.

www.nicolataylorphotographer.com

Botanical perfume maker Alisha Karayanis was inspired to create her fragrance Old Book after opening a 1939 poetry book. She characterises the fragrance as being made "from whispers of smells I interpret from the pages of different old books I have and love," and says "there is nothing better than reading a book authored from another time, especially if it's a rainy day".

www.mossbotanicalperfumes.com

