Clause 66 specifies the circumstances in which the permanent head may serve a notice directing an owner to do all things considered necessary to make the house comply with the regulations or to demolish it. In giving such a direction the permanent head must have due regard to any hardship which compliance with it may cause to the owner. Failure to comply with the directions listed in the notice within the period specified is an offence, although it is a defence for the owner to show that he had made every reasonable endeavour to comply or that to do so would have caused him undue hardship.

Clause 67, sub-clause (1) provides that if an owner fails to comply with a direction under Clause 66, the permanent head may do anything he considers necessary to make the house comply with the regulations or to give effect or any direction made under Clause 66 even if that direction had not required some or any of those things to be done; in addition the permanent head may demolish the house where the case requires.

Clause 68, sub-clause (1) provides that where a direction has been given under Clause 66 the permanent head may give a notice requiring a house to be and to remain unoccupied or requiring the occupier to vacate the house from a specified date. This provision does not apply in those cases where the permanent head has required a house to be made to comply with the regulations and this has been done to his satisfaction before the specified date.

Sub-clause (2) provides that it is an offence to occupy or inhabit the house or permit such occupation or inhabitation after the expiration of the period specified unless the permanent head has issued a certificate of clearance certifying that the house has been made to comply with the regulations.

Clause 69, sub-clause (1) prohibits the owner of any house which is the subject of a declaration under Clause 64 or Clause 66 and which has not subsequently been certified under Clause 68 to comply with the regulations from selling or entering into a contract to sell the house unless a true copy of a certificate under Clause 70 signed by the vendor and purchaser is attached to the contract of sale.

Sub-clause (2) provides that an owner who contravenes sub-clause (1) shall be deemed wilfully to have concealed a defect in his title. It goes on to provide that the purchaser under the contract, where he has not executed the transfer or conveyance of the house to himself, shall be entitled to rescission of the contract and repayment of any sum he has paid under it together with his reasonable costs. In a case where the purchaser has executed the transfer or conveyance to himself, he is entitled to recover damages from the owner for any loss suffered as the result of the wilful concealment of that defect in the title.

Clause 69 re-enacts, with amendments, section 56 (8) of the Housing Act 1958 and section 36 (1) and (4) of the Building Control Act 1981.

The certificate shall state in respect of land described in the application whether the permanent head has served any notice or taken any step under this Part or whether any money is charged on that land.

Sub-clause (2) deems a certificate issued under this Clause to be conclusive proof at its date of any step taken under this Part or of any money which is a charge on that land.

Clause 70 substantially re-enacts with amendments section 61 of the Housing Act 1958.

Such an authorized person is empowered to conduct such inspections and carry out such work or other operations as are necessary.
